About the Conference

As we navigate the complex and pressing challenges of environmental sustainability, the need for collaborative, interdisciplinary solutions has never been greater. The theme, Environmental Synergies: Bridging Disciplines for a Greener Future, aims to bring together diverse fields of knowledge to tackle some of the most critical issues of our time—climate change, biodiversity loss, resource management, and sustainable development. By fostering dialogue and cooperation among experts from varied disciplines, this conference seeks to develop holistic approaches that can make meaningful impacts on global environmental goals. The conference will provide a platform to explore innovative strategies for resilience, policy frameworks for sustainability, and the socioeconomic dimensions of the green economy. Scholars, researchers, and practitioners from fields such as Environmental Science, Engineering, Law, Public Health, Business, Agriculture, Sociology, Information Technology, etc are invited to contribute their unique insights, each crucial to understanding and addressing different aspects of environmental challenges.

In response to the global nature of these challenges, this year's conference introduces a Call for Panels to encourage more tailored and focused discussions. Distinguished academicians are invited to propose panels that may be conducted in both online and offline formats, promoting flexibility for international collaboration. Each panel will be led by a Chair, Co-Chair, and Discussant who will help drive meaningful exchanges among panellists and attendees. Through this interdisciplinary synergy, Environmental Synergies: Bridging Disciplines for a Greener Future aspires to inspire practical, impactful solutions that are resilient, inclusive, and adaptable, contributing to a sustainable and equitable future for all.
